A string of wooden clothespins hanging against a blurred background. The clothespins are made of light-colored wood and have metal springs. They are arranged in a line, with the first one in sharp focus and the others becoming increasingly out of focus as they recede into the background. The background is a soft, warm-toned bokeh of light and dark spots, suggesting an outdoor setting with sunlight filtering through leaves.

A red fire extinguisher is positioned against a light-colored brick wall. A large, bright flame is erupting from the nozzle, extending upwards. To the left of the extinguisher, a vertical metal pipe is visible. In the upper left corner, there is a white shelf with some items on it. The overall scene is lit with a warm, yellowish light.

Who wants change?

A cartoon illustration of a speaker with a mustache, wearing a purple suit, standing at a podium. He is pointing his right index finger upwards. A speech bubble above him contains the text "Who wants change?". In front of him, a large crowd of diverse people is shown from the chest up, with their right hands raised in the air, indicating a show of support or agreement.

Who wants to change?

A cartoon illustration of the same speaker at the podium, pointing his finger upwards. A speech bubble above him contains the text "Who wants to change?". In front of him, the crowd is shown from the chest up, but their hands are not raised. Instead, they have neutral or slightly skeptical expressions. A small, faint speech bubble is visible in the air to the right of the crowd.

Administrative Professionals Day falls on Wednesday, April 25. Here are a few fun facts for this special day!

The Official Recognition Day began in 1962 as National Secretaries Day and renamed to Administrative Professionals Day in 2000. More than 22 million secretaries/administrative professionals are part of the US workforce.

We hope you take some time this week, especially Wednesday, to recognize your fellow Administrative Professionals for their contributions!
